Greetings, Brothers and Sisters:

We in the American labor movement have always taken great pride in our inclusiveness, our belief, to put it simply, that our strength lies in our numbers.

The core of that strength is the 14 million working men and women who are organized, card-carrying AFL-CIO union members, including the 400,000 here in Massachusetts. These members are representative of the broad spectrum of the American workforce, and embody the diversity that marks both our country and our free trade union movement.

Yet, as broad-based and varied as our membership is, it does not tell the entire story of the labor movement. The friends and allies of labor are also part of the story, in that they strengthen and buttress the efforts of men and women who seek decency and justice at the workplace and in the society.

What does it take to be considered a friend of organized labor? It takes a basic and fundamental belief in the right of workers to better themselves by organizing into unions and bargaining as equals with their employers. On another level, it requires a view that the goals and aspirations organized labor espouses are worthy of support.

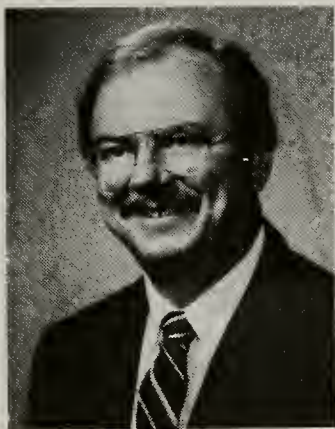

In the political arena, it is relatively easy to determine where lawmakers stand. The friends of labor share our belief that the union movement is a force for good, and they act on that belief. There are, in essence, political allies of the men and women who work for a living, and we are fortunate that in this state such lawmakers number more than a few.

But those millions of people who are not organized into unions, either because they are not eligible or because we have yet to reach them, but who support the labor movement, are also a part of labor's strength. It is those people that we are making a concerted effort to reach more effectively and to communicate with more clearly.

Our strength does indeed lie in numbers. We are stepping up our efforts to organize new members, while at the same time stepping up the effort to organize that less tangible, but important, support. We are a movement that wants to bring everyone along, everyone, that is, who believes in equality and liberty and in social and economic justice.

In Solidarity,

Arthur R. Osborn
President
Massachusetts AFL-CIO

Greetings, Friends of Labor:

Sometimes we don't appreciate what we have, and the publishing of this directory started me thinking about what organized labor has achieved here in this country.

What we have achieved is a country where a free and independent trade union movement is recognized and generally accepted. When the Massachusetts AFL-CIO publishes this directory, for instance, we don't submit it to anyone for screening or approval. We decide what we want to do and we publish, period.

That may sound rather unremarkable, but I recently traveled to Central America on a tour and, in many countries there and elsewhere, such freedom to publish is considered remarkable indeed. For a free trade union movement is a concept many governments find appalling, and a reality unionists still dream of.

But this freedom we enjoy to organize, to speak out, to publish unrestrained, is something tenuous and not to be taken for granted. I mentioned that free trade unions are "generally" accepted. I qualified that remark because there are some who are working full time to wipe out that freedom.

Is it any wonder, then, that unionists react so strongly to any threat to our ability to function openly and independently. One need only look at other countries around the world to see how difficult that freedom is to gain, and it is nothing to be trifled with, or taken for granted.

Still, despite the threats that exist, and they are real, we can take time once in a while to reflect on the fact that our trade union movement is truly free and independent, and beholden to no one. We must also reflect on how many struggled and suffered to achieve that freedom, and how it is our responsibility to cherish and protect that freedom, and to assist those working for free trade unions around the world.

We are united with all those who want unfettered union movements in every country in the world. And while we still have a way to go in this country before we achieve all our goals, let's not overlook how far we have come even while we continue to move forward.

In Solidarity,

George E. Carpenter Jr.
Secretary-Treasurer

WE'VE NEVER SOLD A LOSING TICKET.

It's a fact. Not one single losing ticket.

Since beginning in 1972, the Lottery has returned over $929,730,000 to the treasuries of the cities and towns of Massachusetts. And that money has done a lot of good for everyone. It's kept our highways well-lighted, developed social programs for the aged, even kept our parks and playgrounds clean.

So even if you don't play the Lottery, you're still way ahead. And if you do enjoy the Games, well, think of it this way. You know all those tickets that didn't match anything but the color of your socks? They're also winners.

Everyone is a winner in the Lottery.

IT SEEMS THE HARDER WE WORK, THE MORE WORK THERE IS.

At the Massachusetts Convention Center Authority, we are working hard to bring more convention and meeting business to Massachusetts. And more conventions for Massachusetts mean more jobs for Massachusetts. More jobs for electricians, carpenters, projector operators, maids, construction workers, and others. Because each convention that we bring in requires union people to set up, service, run, and to take down. This spring, thousands of new jobs will be realized when work begins on the 142 million dollar renovation of the Hynes Convention Center. And when the new Hynes Convention Center opens in 1988, the future will be even brighter. We will continue to work hard because "Meet Me In Massachusetts" means jobs for Massachusetts.

Mass chooses it.

Massachusetts boasts the finest medical technology and the most skilled doctors in the world. And thanks to Blue Cross and Blue Shield, these special resources have been made available to Massachusetts workers for generations.

With over 50 years of health care experience, it's no surprise that Blue

Cross and Blue Shield continues its leadership in developing the newest health care plans to serve the ever-changing needs of our workforce.

That innovative spirit and commitment to quality health care is more obvious today than ever... with programs like Master Health Plus,™ Master Dental,™ and a wide variety of Health Maintenance Organizations all across the state.

Massachusetts workers are continuing to choose Blue Cross and Blue Shield... for a variety of good reasons.
